

I had read your article that were delivered by NAD-zine I noticed your passion in declaring how FCC is disconnecting VRS for the poor, old, sick, and people who have disabilities. It reminds me how much passion I had a few years back. Unfortunately, FCC is neglecting millions of people.

The society in Texas have a moral responsibility to provide the services for anyone who needs it; however, it is the FCC commissioners that have different beliefs about who really "need the services."

Please keep in mind that FCC commissioners have the power to remove the barriers that are continually affecting millions of people who needs the services. I read the newspaper the other day about people who are inspired to use VRS to communicate with their relatives. FCC cutted the services off by hours. We are stuck because we have not optioned the hours to make a call or have the services. I am sure, people are not the only one that make a decision. I am being realistic and deeply humbled about this moral character that some FCC Commissioners apparently lacks in.

To think of millions of people who are being neglected: it makes me ail to recognize that my state are going to deny millions of people from receiving the services they truly needs. This state is going to be filled with bitterness after millions of people who are likely going to have a negative experience with the "unnecessary and unfair treatment" from the FCC.

On the other hand, there are FCC commissioners who don't seem to have a generous heart. They were so consistent in keeping the FCC, even though our society declared "NO CUT". They didn't listen nor respect our opinions. Of course, we remember who we will or will not vote.

There are some congressmen who have a generous heart; these congressmen ought to be recognized for trying their hardest to serve their constieuments.

I am honest to say that some congressmen knew how the system work; their intentions are to take away people's rights to have the services they need because they didn't want to deal with the issues.

There are some congressmen who have fought for their people's rights.

For the congressmen who have been a stauncher supporter for the FCC; they weren't strong enough to withhold their morale character. You just gave up ! You didn't have the patience to deal with the issues. I don't have to ask around, I will see it from your actions.

God forbids human lives to be taken, which were the results of some FCC commissioner's decisions; however, FCC commissioner seems to have that power to reorganize VRS that are continually affecting millions of human lives. Did you really care? You tell me.
